Dear Mr. Blake:

In reviewing the updated CIA travel regulations, it has come to my attention that [redacted] provides for first class accommodations at all times for Heads of Independent Offices and Operating Officials. The regulation reads, in relevant part: "It will be assumed, without formal determination, that the purpose of travel...requires the use of first class accommodations."

I believe that the regulations which apply to other departments and agencies of the Executive Branch (Federal Travel Regulations, Federal Property Management Regulations 101-7), stipulate that officials of the Executive branch, including Cabinet members, will only fly first class in unusual circumstances.

I would very much appreciate your comments on the apparent differences in these two provisions.

Aloha, ' "

Chairman
